

HOLD YOUR HORSES! And your bags of Doritos, bowls of popcorn, pans of chili. Roseanne Barr's lovechild has been found. Just last week, the intrepid National Enquirer, with the help of local detective Pete Peterson, revealed that Barr had given up a baby girl for adoption in Denver back in the early Seventies. That, of course, was before Barr even thought about becoming a comic, and long before she hit it big—very big.

Which is just as well, because her daughter's favorite TV comic is Bill Cosby, the tab reports this week. Peterson tracked the girl, now seventeen, down to an anonymous southwestern city, where she sings in the school choir and keeps her weight at 110 pounds—half her mom's bulk. Barr plans on contacting her long-lost daughter after she turns eighteen at the end of the month.
